HAUPTMANN LIFE OFFER DENIED
SENSATIONAL EVIDENCE IS NOW EXPECTED
IDENTITY OF NEW WITNESSES IS CONCEALED
ONE BELIEVED TO BE SISTER OF FISCH

New York, To-day.
It is reported in the newspapers that the prosecution has offered Bruno Hauptmann his life if he reveals the identity of his confederates in the kidnapping and murder of the Lindbergh baby in 1932, but the "New York Times" states that Mr. Wilentz has denied that he made any such offer.
Special precautions have been taken to conceal the identity of the three witnesses in the Hauptmann trial who are arriving to-morrow by the s.s. Ile de France.
They will be taken from the liner in a Government cutter and kept in the background until actually summoned to give evidence.
One is believed to be a sister of Isidore Fisch, the deceased German friend of Hauptmann. — Reuter.

CEYLON'S MALARIA EPIDEMIC
Worst Now Thought To Be Over
MESSAGE OF SYMPATHY FROM HIS MAJESTY

London, To-day.
A message from His Majesty the King has been transmitted to the Governor of Ceylon through the Secretary for the Colonies expressing His Majesty's sympathy with the victims of the recent serious epidemic of malaria in the island.
The message from the Secretary for the Colonies, who has followed the course of the epidemic with interest and concern, adds: "Your last report suggests that the epidemic may have passed its worst, and I trust that this will prove to be the case. In the meantime please convey to all sufferers my sympathy in their misfortune, and to those who are working to fight the disease my best wishes for the success of their efforts." — British Wireless Service.

Happy Valley this morning presented a colourful scene when a Battalion of seamen, a company of Royal Marines and a Naval battery of four 3.7 inch howitzers, drawn from fourteen ships and nine submarines of the China Fleet, were inspected by His Excellency, the Commander-in-Chief, Admiral Sir Frederick Charles Dreyer, K.C.B., C.B.E., and Staff.

Shun Chih Tows In Toa Maru
RIGGING DAMAGED BY HEAVY SEAS

The s.s. Shun Chih, of the Wo Fat Shing Company, arrived back in Hong Kong this morning at 1.30 a.m. with the Toa Maru, formerly the Asia, in tow.
The derelict, which had a heavy list, was towed to a position off Stonecutters before the Shun Chih returned to her usual buoy, B. 12, where she is now lying.
Captain W. Lee, Master of the Shun Chih, this morning said that the Toa Maru was picked up when drifting about 90 miles south-west of Hong Kong at 9 a.m. yesterday morning. The s.s. Apocoy was then standing by. He added that the rigging of the Toa Maru had been damaged by heavy seas.

THE ANTARCTIC CONTINENT
Formation Will Not Be Revealed This Year

Oslo, To-day.
The answer to the question whether the vast antarctic continent is a single land or not has been postponed for another year, for the Ellsworth-Wilkins expedition has decided not to make a trans-Arctic flight this season, as the weather is unfavourable, says a telegram from Berndt Balchen, a member of the expedition, sent from the steamer "Wyatt Earp," now south of Deception Island surrounded with ice, with the expedition aboard all well. — Reuter.

WEATHER FORECAST
The anticyclone over China has increased considerably in intensity, pressure being highest to the west of Shanghai. The depression has moved eastward, and is situated to the east of Kiangsu. The local forecast for to-day, as issued by the Royal Observatory, this morning, was north and north-east winds, fresh to fair.

The inspection was witnessed by a large crowd, including the commanding officers of the various British men-of-war now stationed in Hong Kong, officers, their wives, and friends.
Among the interested spectators were the Hon. Colonial Secretary, Sir Thomas Southorn, and Mr. A. L. Shields, Commander on the Royal Hong Kong Yacht Club.
His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief was received at the saluting base by Captain E. Manners of H.M.S. Suffolk, who commanded the Battalion, Captain R. B. Davies, V.C., D.S.O., A.F.C., (Cornwall), Captain E. R. Bent D.S.C., (Berwick), Captain the Hon. G. Fraser, D.S.O., (Hermes), Captain G. C. B. Collart (Medway), Captain A. R. Hammick (8th Destroyer Flotilla), Captain W. H. Gell, D.S.O., (Adventure), and Captain E. F. B. Law (Herald).

It is likely that Guy Gheng, of Shanghai, will be the reserve.
Meanwhile, it is learned that Miss Yang Hsu-chin (Young Sau King in Cantonese) of Hong Kong will probably be the only girl competitor in the Chinese team, which will enter the Olympic Games, to be held in Berlin next year. — Reuter.

Frenchman Lands Three Doubtful Blows But Briton Fights On
"DEMOLISHING" TACTICS GIVE HOLDER THE VERDICT

Paris, To-day.
Fighting for the European light heavyweight boxing championship over 15 rounds last night, Marcel Thil, the French holder, outpointed Jock McAvoy, the British champion.
When McAvoy, who tipped the scales at 11 st. 8 3/4 lb. and Thil, who weighed in at 11 st. 7 3/4 lb., entered the ring a crowd of 22,000 had filled the Palais des Sports to capacity.
McAvoy won the first three rounds during which the landed excellent body-blows. In the third round Thil twice sent in what appeared to be low blows, but McAvoy fought on.
Thil then forced the pace and won the next three rounds, but the following three were very even. The fight had now developed into an inchlighting contest, which was to the liking of Thil, who now used his famous "demolishing" tactics, which were down his opponent.
In the fourteenth round Thil again landed what appeared to be a low blow and McAvoy went down for a count of four. Later in the round he was again sent to the boards, but was saved by the gong. — Reuter.

POSITION AT 1 A.M. THIS MORNING TEMPERS BECOME FRAYED BY EXCITEMENT UGLY INCIDENTS ANTICIPATED

Paris, To-day.
Unofficial estimates from Saarbruecken received in authoritative quarters here yesterday indicate that 85 per cent. of the votes in the Plebiscite have hitherto been given for Germany.
It is feared in certain quarters that there may be ugly incidents in Saarbruecken to-day as it is stated that tempers are rising there.
"Le Temps," after expressing gratification that Germany has hitherto shown "a certain moderation in her action in the Saar," observes that the liquidation of the Saar problem will not help to clear up the international situation unless it has no violent aftermath, and adds that Germany has a unique opportunity to prove by her reaction to-day her readiness to collaborate on the European plane.
A MESSAGE FROM SAARBRUECKEN STATES THAT WITH ONLY SEVERAL HOURS' COUNTING STILL AHEAD, THE BETTING AT ONE O'CLOCK THIS MORNING WAS 8 TO 1 IN FAVOUR OF GERMANY RECEIVING 85 PER CENT. OF THE TOTAL VOTES. — REUTER.

REDUCTION IN ARMS
EUROPEAN AGREEMENT OPPORTUNE
Anglo-French Talks Next Week

FRANCE NOW MORE HOPEFUL REGARDING SECURITY

London, To-day.
The Cabinet last evening widely surveyed the international situation and is believed to have the opinion that the moment was now very favourable for a further step towards a general European disarmament agreement.
The whole position will be explored when M. Flandin, the French Premier, and M. Laval, Foreign Minister of France, arrive, which is expected to be towards the end of next week.
The idea appears to be that England, France and Italy, should endeavour to find a means of agreeing to the abrogation of the military clauses in the Treaty of Versailles on the understanding that Germany will return to the League of Nations and join in a limitation of the armaments convention. There are indications that the French Government is adopting a more hopeful attitude in regard to the question of security. — Reuter.

NEVER USE A HEAVY MAKE-UP

SCREEN STAR TELLS HER BEAUTY SECRETS

(By Anna Neagle)

London. splendid insurance against shine.

Work A Beautifier

"A splash in cold water in the morning, and at night a lather of warm water and my favourite baby soap are the first of my simple beauty secrets....

"If my face feels rough, I use cold cream or a herbal skin food, and I sometimes put on some oil of sweet almonds.

"I never use a heavy make-up... except, of course, the yellow stuff they put on your face in the studio! At home, in the daytime, I like just to accentuate the lips... this I do with lipsticks in a vivid lacquer shade. In the evening, I use the same lipstick with just a touch of compact rouge....

"I like a lotion for my powder base, with a touch of vanishing cream, well rubbed into the skin, on the nose.... This latter is a

My hair is, always washed at home with a liquid pine shampoo, and I dry it with a hand-drier. I am lucky enough to have a natural wave, so the process is very simple....

"I can't be too emphatic about the value of fresh air and exercise for beauty and fitness.... My home is not far from Epsom, and when I am not working I am always out of doors, get plenty of sleep, and never go to town unless it is absolutely necessary.

I am a keen swimmer and tennis player, but don't believe in letting games or sport develop into hard work.... I just play for fun.... Another great beautifier is—work! It leaves you no time to worry about yourself and produce a crop of wrinkles in the process."

WOMEN THROUGH WOMEN'S EYES

Women may be infinitely forgiving towards men. But their charity seldom extends to other women! See the following quotations from recent books by women novelists:—

Marion Harvey in "The Dragon of Lung Wang" (Wright and Brown, 3s. 6d.).

"A woman about always kills her rival; seldom here erring husband."

Barbara Hedworth in "Husband to Anna" (Jarrolds, 7s. 6d.).

"She was a woman, wasn't she, this Christine Slade? And therefore capable of all sorts of treacheries and disloyalties. He had no time for women. Pretty, untrustworthy baubles."

Lida Larrimore in "Jonathan's Daughter" (Blackie, 7s. 6d.).

"Were women always on guard, suspicious of beauty in other women?"

MOTH-PROOF DRAWERS

Drawers in which woollens are stored will be found more moth-proof if, in addition to the precautions taken with the woollens themselves, they are wiped round with a turpentine cloth.

THE NEW MARINA SHOE

The new Marina shoe, of softest crushed calf, promises to have a vogue. There is on view the pair specially presented to and accepted by the princess. Suede is again much seen, often combined with kid or soft calf.

CARPETS AND RUGS

Carpets and rugs, if it is not desirable to send these to the cleaners, can be washed at home with carpet soap or shampooed with a vacuum cleaner attachment.

Small bits of satin in lovely pastel shades are pieced together to fashion the patchwork coat of a novel pair of pajamas worn by the lovely Madge Evans, of film-land. The trousers are of pale blue moire edged in matching satin. A large moire bow trims the neckline.

A NATIONAL CRAFT

One English craft—the art of quilting—is already well known to the Duchess of Kent and greatly appreciated by her. Her love of quilting will certainly endear her to the women of Wales and the north who have seen to it that fine specimens of their work will be prominent in the Princess' London home.

WHITE AND BROWN DRAWING-ROOM NOVEL COLOUR SCHEME

London. One of the newest solutions of the problem of the small fashionable drawing-room is the two-colour scheme of decoration, carried out in an unusual combination with great concentration.

A distinctive drawing-room everything is either nigger brown or pure white, except the covers of the books on the window ledge. Armchairs and sofa have been covered in quilted white percale and piped with brown as are also the white washable hide chairs.

Adam scones on the wall have been painted white, the telephone is white, and there is a modernist clock over the writing table which is white with brown hands. The hostess uses only white flowers, lilies, honesty or white heather, in white Devonshire pottery bowls lined with dark brown or in glass tumblers.

A nigger brown china tea service is used for tea in this room with a white cloth, and the corner china cupboard, painted white, is lined with brown.

MONKEY FUR

A safer shoulder-line and decollete for the plump figure is a plain cut square, with a wide bow across the front. And what about the thin woman? Here is what a fashionable hostess said: "Nothing is so helpful to her weakness as a roundly cut corsage, outlined softly in monkey fur."

"BELLE OF THE NINETIES"—KING'S THEATRE
Mae West, America's "past time," comes to the King's Theatre in a story written by herself, the "Belle Of The Nineties."

The story is laid against the colourful background of St. Louis, New Orleans and the Mississippi towns during the 90's. John Miljan is cast as the owner of the smartest gambling and entertainment palace in the South.

As the most famous burlesque queen in the country, Mae West leaves St. Louis, goes to Miljan's establishment and wins the South by charm. Miljan, trying to be the big man in her life, lets himself in for trouble when he attempts to turn Miss West against her prize-fighter sweetheart.

How the girl with the hour-glass figure finds real love at last, after a dramatic climax, brings the film to a grand finale.

"OUTCAST LADY"—QUEEN'S THEATRE

Michael Arlen's "The Green Hat" first came to the screen as "A Woman of Affairs," in which Greta Garbo and John Gilbert were starred, comes in another version as "The Outcast Lady," at the Queen's Theatre.

Constance Bennett and Herbert Marshall are playing the leading roles in this Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's latest production of the charming novel.

"The Outcast Lady" tells the story of two orphans, a boy and a girl, whose ancestry have been known as wastrels and spend-thrifts, and who are shunned by society as a result.

The boy and the girl are in love with each other, but the boy's father cannot allow the girl to ruin his son's future in the Civil Service by contracting such a marriage.

The girl marries another man, a great friend of both the orphan girl and her lover, but for some mysterious reason he commits suicide on his wedding night, and thereafter the film continues with an interesting series of incidents, during which every member of the cast is prominent.

Others outstanding in the cast are Hugh Williams, Ralph Forbes and Elizabeth Allan.

"CENTRAL AIRPORT"—STAR THEATRE

Action, thrills, and daring flights, combined with romance, make First National's production, "Central Airport," one of the finest air films seen in the Colony.

The story of the film is that of two brothers who share all dangers of the air, but who find that they cannot share the dangers of the embraces of a woman whom they both love.

A stellar array of stars, including Richard Barthelmess, Sally Eilers and Tom Brown, are in the cast.

"SPRINGTIME FOR HENRY"—MAJESTIC THEATRE

A hilarious comedy drama of a bachelor's errors in the spring is now showing at the Majestic Theatre in "Springtime For Henry," featuring Otto Kruger, Nancy Carroll, Nigel Bruce, Heather Angel and Herbert Mundin.

The story deals with the hectic life of Henry Dewlip, a modern young bachelor whose adventures are chiefly concerned, in this interlude, with two women...one the wife of a friend, the other a self-righteous strait-laced disciple of the "decent thing."

Heather Angel and Nancy Carroll provide the love interest.

"THE FIGHTING MARSHAL"—ALHAMBRA THEATRE

Tim McCoy, the well-known actor of Western characters is featured in Columbia's current production, "The Fighting Marshal," now showing at the Alhambra Theatre.

The picture is a fast moving drama of the west, where Tim provides some hard riding scenes, disguised as a marauding bandit, and is hounded by the law, but finally reconciles himself with civilization.

In addition to the feature picture there are 2,700 feet of Mike Snow, the eight round fight between Max Schmeling and Mike Walker.

BRIDGE NOTES

Bridge Problems Are Popular

by Ely Culbertson.

Bridge problems are becoming more and more popular. Actually, the average Bridge problem bears little relation to the play of a hand at Bridge except that it tends to accentuate the so-called "expert" situations, such as those involving intricate squeezes and deeply involved throw-in plays. However, the Bridge problem is now so popular that on street corners, in restaurants, and even in theatres, you will see people poring over the printed diagram, trying to figure out how to make four tricks where only two meet the eye.

The nucleus of every problem is an end situation in which there may be as few as three or four cards in each hand—a form in which the solution will generally reveal itself upon inspection. The vily construction of problems must therefore make it necessary for the solver to make some bizarre or intricate play or series of plays in order to arrive at the end-play situation.

The two examples below are five-card end-play situations:

RESCUED FROM NEURALGIA

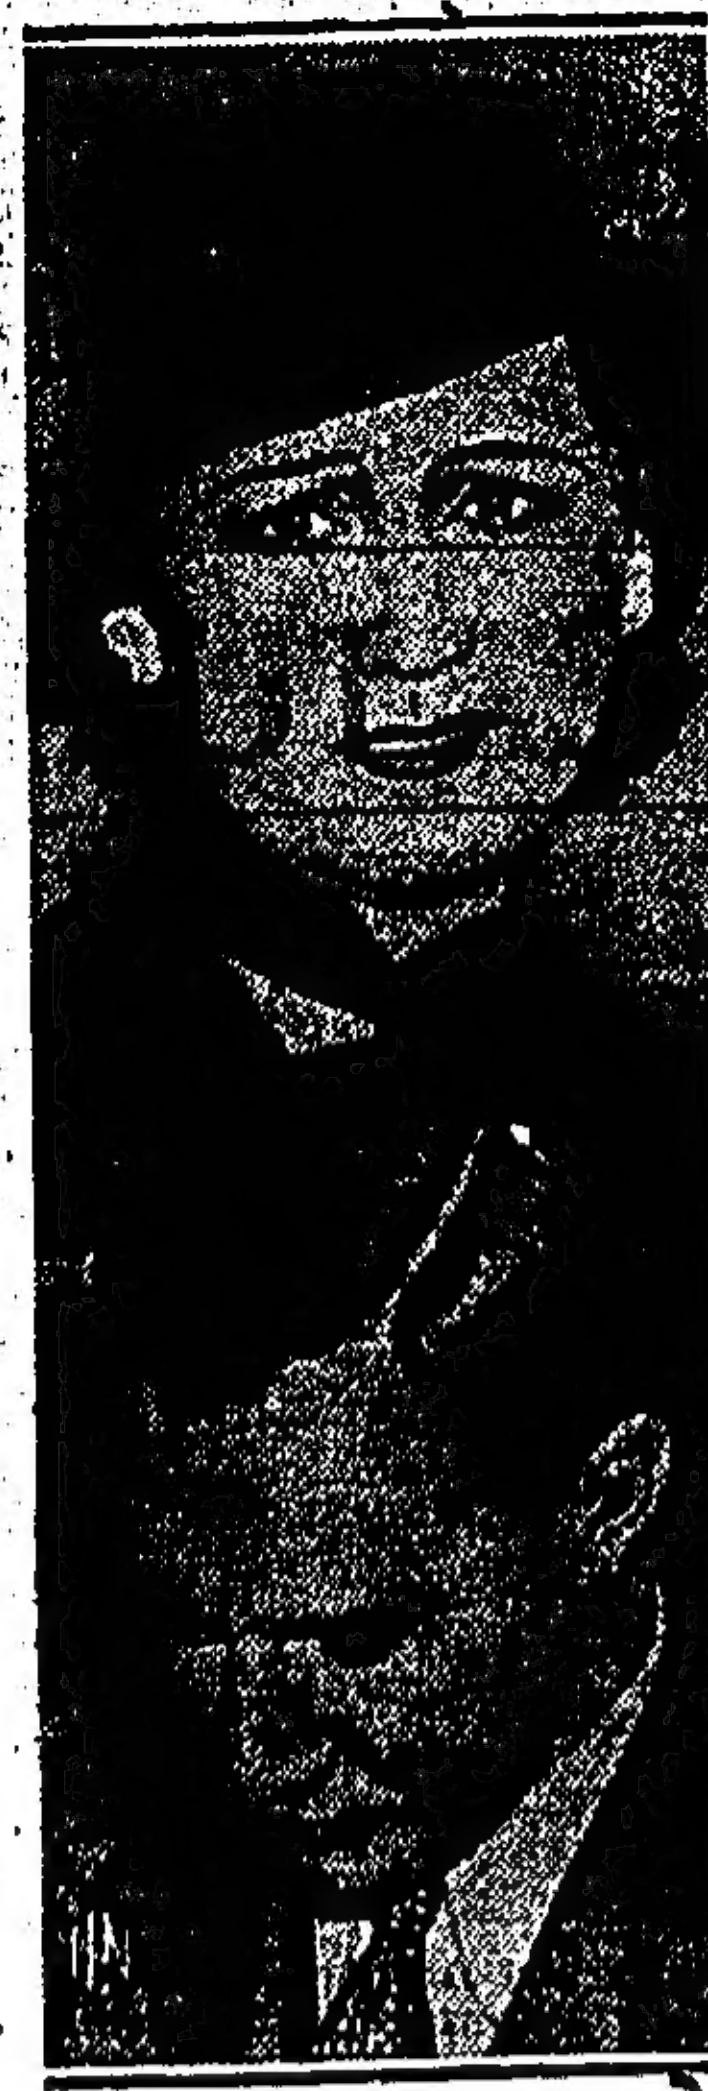

A Shanghai Sufferer's Happy Experience With DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS.

To every sufferer from neuralgia, or nerve pains of any description, the following letter recently received from Mrs. M. Fleisher, a lady secretary residing at 118 Ward Road, Shanghai, carries a message of hope and comfort.

"I am very glad to have the opportunity to tell you how beneficial Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have been to me," writes Mrs. Fleisher. "I was suffering from severe neuralgic pains in my head and face for a number of years, and as I am employed in a large commercial firm, these pains proved a great drawback to me in my daily work. But I am glad to say that since I began taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills over a month ago these pains are a thing of the past. I feel much better, have more 'pep,' and take greater interest in myself and in life, which I attribute to the wonderful curative properties contained in your medicine. I feel very grateful to you for putting such a marvellous remedy on the market."

World famous as a blood builder and nerve tonic, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have earned their great reputation on the testimony of the innumerable grateful people they have rescued from suffering. They purify bad blood, enrich poor blood, and by rapidly increasing the red corpuscles and haemoglobin content in the bloodstream, they send new health, strength and vitality to all parts of the system.

If you suffer from any ailment due to poor blood or disordered nerves, give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a trial, and you will soon find that they are worth the price. "Of chemists everywhere."

"I am ruined. I can't go back to Texas now," mourns Mrs. Eva Daniels, 30, of Georgetown, Tex., above, who left her husband and two children at home while she visited relatives in Philadelphia. There she casually met Duncan Duncomb (below), ex-army officer, who induced her to make a tour of New York nightclubs with him. Then, she alleges, he decamped with jewelry. Four other women have appeared to make charges against the "professional Romeo."

CHARITY SOCCER JOINT BODIES' NEW PROPOSAL ACCEPTED 'THE KOTEWALL CUP' COMPETITION BREAK FOR PLAYERS

A joint proposal formulated by the Navy, the Army, and the South China Athletic Association, that friendly charity football matches be staged on an organized basis, namely, that instead of agreeing to the requests of each and every institution or body requiring financial assistance, and playing a match in aid thereof, only a fixed number of matches should be played every year and the gate receipts derived from such would be pooled together for distribution at the discretion of a Committee to be appointed, was passed at the monthly meeting of the Hong Kong Football Association, held yesterday in the Association's Board-room at the Sports Club.

This proposal was the result of a month's deliberation by the three bodies concerned, who felt that although the Sunday Herald International Charity Cup Competition, conducted by the Hong Kong Football Association, provided a good sum for distribution yearly, each and every one of the numerous charitable applications received by the various Clubs deserved every consideration and support. It would, however, not be possible to comply with all such requests, and, further, the continuous playing of friendly charity matches would not only be detrimental to the interests of the teams in the various competitions, but would tend to "over-work" all the players with serious consequences to their health and welfare.

Kotewall Challenge Cup
It was further suggested by the three bodies that the charity matches should be run on a competition basis for a challenge cup to be competed for annually.
The Hon. Dr. R. H. Kotewall, C.M.G., LL.D., was approached with a view to his donating a silver challenge cup. He immediately gave his hearty support to the scheme and kindly consented to make such a donation. It was then decided to name the trophy the Kotewall Cup.
The following rules for this series were adopted:

1. The Competition shall be called "The Kotewall Cup Charity Competition" and the sanction of the Hong Kong Football Association has been duly obtained.
2. A Cup called "The Kotewall Cup" has been presented by The Hon. Dr. R. H. Kotewall, C.M.G., LL.D., and the same shall be competed for annually by teams representing the S.C.A.A., the Royal Navy and the Army.
3. The Competition shall be conducted according to the Laws of the Game, and the Rules, Regulations and Bye-Laws of the Football Association of England and of the Hong Kong Football Association, and shall be managed by a Committee of seven members, three of whom shall be appointed by the South China Athletic Association; two of whom shall be appointed by the Royal Naval Recreation Club and two of whom shall be appointed by the Hong Kong Area Sports Board. This Committee shall meet when necessary and four members present shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

ARMY HOCKEY ELEVEN LOSE TO H.K.S.R.A.

In a friendly hockey match on the U. S. R. C. ground at King's Park yesterday, the H. K. S. R. A. Brigade, defeated the Army eleven by goals to 1. Aya Singh and Dost Mohamed scoring for the winners, while Lt. Garthwaite netted for the Army.

RECREIO HOCKEY WIN

BOYS AND NOVICES DO WELL VERY CLOSE CLASHES WITNESSED

NO KNOCK-OUT DECISIONS GIVEN

Several brilliant bouts were witnessed in the opening rounds of the China Fleet Amateur and Team Boxing Championships, which commenced at the China Fleet Club Theatre yesterday afternoon with 12 bouts, and continued last night with an additional 20 fights, most of which produced good, clean, hard-hitting encounters.

THE BEST BOUT SEEN YESTERDAY AFTERNOON WAS IN THE FIRST ROUND OF THE FEATHERWEIGHTS, WHEN A. B. LIDDARD (ADVENTURE), HOLDER OF THE NOVICES' FEATHERWEIGHT CHAMPIONSHIP, LOST TO BOY CURTIS (KENT), IN THE FIRST ROUND OF THEIR FEATHERWEIGHT CLASH, THE BOUT GOING TO AN EXTRA ROUND, DURING WHICH CURTIS PUNISHED LIDDARD WITH SOME BEAUTIFUL STRAIGHT-LEFTS AND RIGHT-HANDED HOOKS TO THE JAW.

In the first round of the Middleweight, Ord. Sea. O'Brien (Berwick), fought a splendid battle against Sto. Cruickshank (Suffolk), and had almost knocked his man out when the final bell saved him. This was one of the finest bouts seen for some time and was only eclipsed by the Boys' Featherweight Championship bout between Boy Moss (Suffolk) and Boy Foyster (Kent), held last week.

There were many hard hitting bouts last night, least among them being the second round middleweight clash between A. B. Dawson (Destroyers) and Mne. Smith (Tamar). The latter, who actually did the most damage with a straight-left, was the loser against a man, who, although he hit hard, hit with the open glove and around the shoulders and back. Dawson was nevertheless given the decision, much to everybody's amazement.

Boy King Wins Again
One of the best exhibitions of boxing, was given by Boy Ottwill (Kent) and Ord. Sea. Tuck (Suffolk) in the Flyweight class. Tuck won the decision comfortably, although Ottwill gave a very game display and was heartily applauded for his efforts against a better man.

BAN LIFTED ON FOREIGN TRIPS BY U.S. ATHLETES

Probable Tours This Year

New York.
The Foreign Relations Committee of the Amateur Athletic Union has lifted the ban on foreign trips by American athletes in pre-Olympic year, paving the way for a series of expeditions to other lands this year by this country's outstanding athletes. Invitations will probably be accepted to send a team of two weight-lifters to England, fourteen swimmers and a wrestling team to Japan, three or four track and field stars to Australia and a track team to Sweden and other European countries.

CORRESPONDENCE

Ladies' Hockey

[To the Editor "China Mail"]

Sir,—With reference to "Onlooker's" remarks in yesterday's edition of the China Mail regarding the omission of Miss Gittins from the Ladies' Interport hockey eleven, I must say that I do not agree that she should be included in preference to Miss Dalziel, the present selection for the inside-left berth.

Granted, that Miss Gittins has played inside to Miss Woolley, the leader, and thoroughly understands the latter's methods, but that is no criterion, and if one is to select a team solely on the merits of supporting players, then I would suggest Miss Iris Woolley at right-half in support of Miss J. Wong, in preference to Miss Pope, as the former two have played together for the past two seasons with conspicuous success.

Miss Dalziel is one of the hardest working forwards in local ladies' hockey, and I doubt very much whether Miss Gittins would add the same stimulus that Miss Dalziel has exhibited so far in her trial displays.

The little point about Miss Dalziel not being able to use the reverse stick shot is a common fault among lady players in the Colony, and should not, I suggest, be taken too seriously into consideration in the selection of the inside-left position.

Further, "Onlooker's" remarks about Miss Smith, being inexperienced are unjustifiable, for the latter has proved herself more than capable against the best lady teams in the Colony, and can be credited with scoring two of the best goals seen this season, solely on her own initiative. (I refer to the goal against the Hong Kong Ladies' at Sookunpo, and the first goal scored in the first Ladies' Trial at Sookunpo).

Misunderstanding

Mr. Caer Clark wishes it made known that he had no connection whatever with the correspondence from "Clare Oak" in yesterday's edition, and that he is even ignorant of the identity of the correspondent.

AFTER TWELVE SUCCESSIVE TRIUMPHS

BABE HUNT AVOIDS HAYMAKERS

OUTBOXES CHAMPION'S BROTHER

Boston, Jan. 10.
After 12 straight knockout victories Jacob "Buddy" Baer discovered here to-night that he is perhaps not as good as his big brother Max, the world heavy-weight titlist.

Buddy dropped a decision in four rounds to the veteran Babe Hunt, of Ponca City, Oklahoma. There was no doubt of Max's superiority when he clowned four rounds against the Oklahoman at Detroit last Friday night.
Max also put on a show here to-night, dancing around during a four-round exhibition with Dick Madden, of Boston. He scaled 213 pounds to 194 for the local heavy.

Cowboy Too Smart
Buddy, 18-year-old, six foot four behemoth, who weighs some 25 pounds more than Max, tried in vain to manoeuvre Hunt into position for one of his haymakers, but the cowboy was too smart for this and proceeded to outbox him.

Buddy's twelfth kayo victory was at Detroit on Friday where he put Jack O'Doud away in the second round.—Associated Press.

GERMANY TRAINS FOR OLYMPIC GAMES

SECRETS FOR SOCCER SUCCESS

THE WINGER'S WORK IN A MODERN FORMATION

ALSO EXPECTED TO OBTAIN GOALS

(By ELLIS RIMMER, Sheffield Wednesday's International Outside Left.)

HAS the wing forward's job changed in recent years? Sometimes you hear people saying that the winger is expected to get goals nowadays—implying that he used to be a kind of non-scoring ornament. Of course, the winger is expected to get goals. And so is every other man in the forward line. You can "get goals" either by scoring yourself or by helping a colleague to score.

THE WING FORWARD'S JOB TO-DAY IS REALLY JUST THE SAME AS IT HAS ALWAYS BEEN. BUT THE MANNER IN WHICH HE IS EXPECTED TO FULFIL THAT JOB NATURALLY Varies ACCORDING TO THE TACTICS EMPLOYED BY HIS TEAM.

Depending upon the general formation of his team in action, and the tactics employed on any particular occasion, a forward on the wing might be a schemer, a forger, or a marksman.

One very successful method of using wing forwards depends upon the work of the centre forward. The wingers lie well up the field, while the centre forward keeps somewhat to the rear of the attack until he can get possession of the ball. Then he sends it over to one wing or the other. The winger who receives the pass may dash ahead and attempt to score, or he may outwit the opposing defence by cross passing to his colleague on the opposite wing.

There are dozens of tricks and stunts that can be employed by five well-combined forwards. They can advance in line. They might adopt the "W" or the "V" formation. Their centre forward might be responsible for making most of the shots at goal; on the other hand, the leader of the attack may become simply a schemer.

Place Changing

One of the modern devices which tend to put a new complexion upon the winger's work consists of place-changing. The centre forward may change place at times with an inside man, or a winger might do a little shuffling of positions with his inside colleague.

Whatever tactics are employed, however, the wing forward is seldom of any practical value unless he has a good turn of speed. He must be able to get quickly into his stride, and sprint at top speed for forty or fifty yards.

Apart from speed, I suppose we must say that a winger has to be clever. It is fashionable nowadays to regard capable footballers as "clever." But I maintain that good football never has been played by a fool!

It is no fool's job, believe me, to sprint along the wing, to keep in touch with your colleagues, to decide when to shoot and when to pass. In addition, you have to be accurate so that you can pass capably from almost any position.

The text-books used to tell us that a wing forward could only pass in one direction. But that was before the days of place-changing. I consider that the winger always required the ability of passing either to right or left, otherwise he might have failed in an emergency. But to-day this two-footed ability is more necessary than ever before.

The winger might find himself, under certain emergency circumstances, quite near the middle of the field, while his centre forward or inside colleague is taking care of the winger's own wing. The situation clearly calls for right and left passing ability.

It is a mistake for any man to become too stereotyped in his style of play, for he has to be prepared for the time when his team are temporarily disorganised by vigorous adversaries.

The man who can help to restore order and formation, after his team have been hard pressed by the adversaries, must be able to accomplish more than the routine duties of his own particular job.

That is why versatility is so important to the wing forward as to any other player. Perhaps the winger should be even more versatile than his colleagues, because he is so often called upon to use his own initiative.

special responsibility is to decide whether to pass or to dribble the ball up the field. If he makes the wrong decision he may lose a goal-scoring opportunity for his team, but he will never be bulky of this when he has learned to sum-up a situation accurately and quickly.

Obviously it would be foolish to attempt to dribble the ball on your own account if you have to contend with powerful opposition. Perhaps you can get past one opponent quite safely. But it would be necessary to pass before a second opponent could intercept the ball.

The Right Moment

Choosing the right moment for passing the ball is important. To pass too soon is almost as bad as passing too late. A capable winger will keep the ball at his feet until the last possible instant, hoping that the opponents will expect him to continue dribbling. Then he will centre the ball or pass it over to the other wing.

When the opponents are pressing hard, a moment's unnecessary delay may prove disastrous. That is why first-time centring is so vital. Get the ball away at the psychological moment, and learn to do this from even the most awkward position—this is very sound advice for the young winger. Yet a pass will not prove successful if it is not received safely by the man to whom you sent the ball. The effectiveness of a pass is just as much your responsibility as his. If you "sky" the ball so that he cannot possibly get to it, the failure must be debited against you. Again, if you send the ball along the ground when the field is crowded, the ball is not likely to arrive at its intended destination.

Practising kicking and passing is much more important from the winger's point of view than thinking out clever ideas for drawing the opposing centre-half. You have to learn how to time the kick and how to regulate the force you put behind it. Once you have learned how to send the ball just where you want it to go, you are well on the way towards success.

The wing forward has to pass back occasionally, but usually it is best to keep looking ahead—not towards the opponents' goalmouth but towards the corner flag on the opposite wing. By sending the ball in that direction you are advancing it, and at the same time you are giving scoring chances to your colleagues—provided they are correctly positioned. Keep the ball along your own wing; only when a reasonably safe opportunity is found.

COTTON COMMENTS ON RYDER CUP

"Rules Should Not Be Changed"

DANGER OF INTERNATIONAL CONTEST

Henry Cotton, the British open champion, thinks that the Ryder Cup rules should not be altered in order that he might play for the British team against America this year.

"I feel that no request to change the rule should be made because it would create too dangerous a precedent," he stated in an interview in Brussels.

Under the present ruling, Cotton is not eligible to play in the next match because he lives out of Great Britain, but has been suggested by the American P.G.A. that the British P.G.A. should ask the donor of the cup for permission to change the deed of gift to enable Cotton to take part.

International Danger

Commenting on this, Cotton said, "The Ryder Cup would become an international contest instead of a match between Great Britain and America. All other professionals on the Continent would be entitled to participate, if they could claim British origin or birth."

"I definitely do not think the rules should be changed, but I am merely giving you my private opinion. If there is a change in the rules and I am asked to play for Great Britain, I shall, of course, be happy to do so," he added.

1934'S PROUD RECORD OF TRIUMPHS

IMPROVEMENT OVER PREVIOUS YEAR

THREE WORLD CHAMPIONSHIPS

BERLIN, JANUARY 7. GERMANY DURING THE YEAR JUST CLOSED HAS MADE BIG STRIDES TOWARD PRIMING ITS YOUTH FOR THE COMING OLYMPIC GAMES. IMPROVEMENT HAS BEEN EVIDENT IN ALL BRANCHES OF SPORT.

Here is the proud score for 1934: three world championships, twenty-six European championships, and victory in fifty-eight dual national meets out of a total of seventy.

Compared with 1933 this means vast progress. Then German sports seemed to be slackening. They were reorganized and "harmonized." While this was in process, actual activities, naturally, were somewhat impeded. The result of 1934 shows, however, that this transition period is over.

Most cherished of the achievements of 1934 in Germany are the victory in the dual track and field meet with Finland, the world-record of Hanns-Heinz Sievert in the Decathlon; and the third place of the German national team in the world-championshipship football series played in Italy.

The dual track meet with Finland was the first held with that country. Germany's victory, won with 106.5 against 95.5 points, (for the contest the standard events of the Olympic Games were chosen) is being considered as establishing the Fatherland as the best European sports nation. The Finns had no excuse to offer. The better team obviously won.

Sievert's World Record

Next highest is rated Sievert's world-record in the Decathlon. He attained the surprising mark of 8790.46 points. Sievert also won the European title in the Decathlon with a mark of 8103.245 points. During the contest he had hurt his knee, greatly impeding him in the two closing events. Nevertheless, he outdistanced all European top-notchers including Finns and Swedes.

Pride over the third place in the football world-championship needs some explanation. As will be recalled, this championship was an "open" tournament, with both professional and amateur teams competing. Germany was the only amateur team to reach the semi-finals. There it was narrowly beaten by Czechoslovakia to win over Austria (one of the best professional teams in Europe) in the runoff for third place. Aside from this one defeat, the German national soccer team won all its seven dual national meets in 1934.

In view of these achievements, Germany, it is pointed out here,

"KID" BERG'S EASY VICTORY

Bout With Belgian Stopped In Fourth Round

REFEREE'S STRANGE ACTION

London, Dec. 3.

Making his first appearance as British lightweight champion, Jack "Kid" Berg easily beat Alfred Bastin, of Belgium, in a ten-rounds contest at the Ring yesterday, the referee stopping the fight in the fourth round.

Shortly after the bell had sounded for the fourth round Bastin's chief second waved a towel to indicate that the Belgian, who was badly punished, would retire. The referee, however, took the towel away from the second, and threw it out of the ring. A few seconds later the fight was stopped.

Berg's two-handed fighting soon had Bastin in difficulties, and in the first two rounds it was obvious that the match was one-sided. Now, and again Bastin, who was a substitute for Leroy, the French boxer, scored with left leads, but punched by the quicker moving Englishman.

ACHONG INVITED BY WEST INDIES

E. Achong, the West Indian slow bowler, who played for Rochdale last season, has been asked to return to the West Indies to play against the M.C.C. touring side. It is anticipated that Achong will play again for Rochdale in 1935.

Three Championships

The three world-championships won by Germany in 1934 were, in secondary branches of sport. They were: gymnastics (cross-bar), bicyclic polo, and four-men Bob-sleigh.

Far more indicative of Germany's prowess in sports are the victories in the German championships. They were: seven in track and field, five in canoeing, three in wrestling, two in rowing, and one each in swimming, fancy-diving, high-diving, boxing, and clay-pigeon shooting. To these were added one title each in canoeing, swimming, fancy-diving and high-diving at the European Women's Championships.

In the dual national meets, Germany won in track and field against France, Switzerland, and Finland, but lost against Sweden. The contest with Sweden was lost by one-third of a point. Defeat was due to the disqualification of the German four-hundred metre relay team which had won by a big margin but for one of its runners over-stepping the mark.

Ice Hockey Results

In ice hockey, four dual meets were won and four lost; defeat came from the hands of the United States, Canada, Austria, and Switzerland; in boxing four were won and one lost; in football seven were won and one lost; in handball three were won (all by a big margin); in hockey four were won and in water-polo seven were won and one lost (to Hungary which in this sport has lead for over a decade).

In all it is a proud record which, however, the Germans believe they can better during this year, when, as they are convinced, their coaching for selecting and training for the Olympic Games will work even more smoothly and efficiently than during the past year.

The Vote And The Count

Perhaps never, certainly very rarely, have so many journalists been standing by waiting for some sensational news as last Sunday; and everybody except the journalists and possibly some of their employers can congratulate himself that copy was very hard to find. Once again "no news is good news." The exact figures of the plebiscite are an interesting item, but when the issue is taken for granted a few votes more or less will not make a sensation. The Council of the League has seen to it that France and Germany have been brought into conference as to the terms of settlement that are to come into force when the Saarland is handed back to Germany, but these could hardly be officially announced or confirmed until the result of the voting had been reported and duly registered. It is quite enough to know that terms have been arranged, and there is no question that if the two parties are satisfied the League will be quite content to accept their decision. It is a matter for those two countries only to say how many tons of coal are to be handed over as payment for the mines, and how they are to be valued in the ledgers. That apparently humdrum end to a long controversy is the really important point of the whole business. The League exists to substitute civilian for military methods; it has failed to do so in several spectacular quarrels, and the proof that it is capable of fulfilling its true function when given a chance is a very welcome addition to its fading prestige.

A couple of thousand soldiers with sidearms would not be a very formidable defence against any large section of the eight hundred thousand voters that might be excited to serious riot; but neither would the bluecoated policeman that keeps order at a polling booth in Shoreham or Lower Hamlets. The essential thing is that the bluecoated policeman is known not to be acting in the interests of either of the candidates, and the knowledge that he would not be efficient with anyone of the opposing party that tried to apply violence to the contest is quite enough to induce him to leave off his task and go home quietly. If the little international force had some of the same quality of impartiality and the same sense of responsibility, there would be no need to be worth while to challenge the omen is good.

What a paradox it is that the aura of efficient impartiality seems to be nowhere so lacking as in the country of the statesman who was the most eager advocate of the League. At the time of New Deals and general discontent with old deals that have obviously done the world much damage, it would be strange indeed if the project of joining the League were not being discussed in the United States. So soon as the recovery of lost foreign trade is taken in hand, seriously, it will be seen that no other act can be half so remunerative as joining up with the other nations that are trying to carry out President Wilson's ideal and constantly finding that they are handicapped by the absence, or even resistance of the United States. The arguments used by the opponents are strangely unconvincing. We are told that it would derogate from the sovereignty of the States. That is not merely true, but so much of a truism as not to be worth repeating. Every treaty whatever limits the action of a state while it exists, and to the extent of its provisions, just as every contract limits the freedom of action of the man who signs it to the extent of binding him to carry out the provisions of the contract. There is no other sense in which sovereignty is infringed; and the other members limit their own freedom in exactly the same way. It really amounts to claiming the right to go to war without any preliminary discussion, while other countries are required to justify themselves in doing so.

No doubt adherence to the Hague Court would be the first step. The Court was created in a Conference at which the United States were represented; they have at all stages been consulted; American law and judgments would be quoted as often as any others; and American judges would be included in the judicial panel. Yet we are told that if the States should "join up," it would be on condition that no decision should apply to any dispute in which they might be one of the interested parties. It is very difficult to believe that such nonsense is really talked by any responsible member of Congress; but the very fact that such an absurd suggestion should be made shows how completely the idea of creating a consistent body of international law has failed to penetrate the brain of the "practical politician."

It is quite likely that Germany will re-enter the League before the current year is out, for there is every indication that the special limitations applicable to her will be waived by general consent. The entry of the States would make the League a real forum for the discussion of the world's difficulties, as it was meant to be but never has yet been. Japan would begin to feel rather lonely outside.

HERE, THERE

EVERYWHERE

LIKE FATHER, LIKE SON

In the tributes to Lord Buckmaster there is to be found only the briefest references to his father.

Although he began life as a farm labourer, he was a remarkable man, with the same gifts of eloquence and single-mindedness that distinguished his son.

He made a name for himself in the 'forties by his fiery public speeches against the Corn Laws, attracting thereby the attention of Bright and Cobden.

Later, he turned his attention from politics to education, and became a moving spirit in the Science and Art Department in Kensington.

He was always a fighter, and put up a stout resistance to the encroachment of the landlords on London's common lands. It was largely by his efforts that they were reclaimed for the people.

(By Capt. J. G. Bisset, R.N.R., ret'd.)

THE great liner is outward bound from England to the United States. She has just passed Bishop Rock Lighthouse (Scilly Islands)—her last link with home—and its friendly beams are rapidly sinking below the horizon on her starboard quarter.

Before her lie three thousand miles of trackless ocean, the most tempestuous stretch of water on the face of the globe.

High up on the bridge, seventy feet above the water, the chief and third officers, who are keeping the four to eight watch, stand peering into the darkness ahead. Occasionally they focus their binoculars on the lights of near-by vessels, and at times the course is altered slightly to give a passing ship a wider berth.

Barometer Falling

So far the weather has been normal and the ship has been slipping along at twenty-three knots. Now a smart south-westerly breeze has sprung up, and raised a choppy sea, which starts her pitching easily. Every few minutes a wave slaps against the bow and sends a cloud of spray whipping across the fore-castle head.

The captain, who has been snatching a series of cat-naps during the night in the chart-room, rouses himself wearily and takes a long look at the barometer. "Falling—rapidly," he mutters to himself, and struggling into his greatcoat he steps out on to the bridge.

"You there, Mr. Rankin," he calls into the darkness.
 "Aye, aye, sir," answers the chief officer, and the captain gropes his way towards the voice. "Black as the inside of a cow," he grunts as he ranges alongside and plants his feet widely apart. "Yes," replies the chief. "It's very black, but perfectly clear."

Dirty Weather Ahead

At that moment a heavy spray crashes over the bridge and they duck for shelter below the wooden dodger.

"Heavy swell getting up since we passed the Bishops," says the chief.
 "Aye," rejoins the captain. "Glass falling rapidly, too. It looks like dirty weather to me. Make sure that everything is well secured round the decks," and with that he seeks the warmth and shelter of the chart-room again.

At 8 a.m. the sun appears above a low bank to the eastward—a brassy orb, presaging wind, and plenty of it.

The two officers for the eight to twelve watch arrive on the bridge clad in oilskins and sea-boots, having been warned of the weather. The retiring officers hand over various details such as the course, speed, leeway, revolutions of the engines, compass error, barometer movements, and so on, and dive down to their quarters for a well-earned bath and breakfast.

By now the wind has risen to gale force and the waves are running to a height of twenty feet. Every now and again the liner puts her bows under and ships the top of a sea which sweeps along the deck in a foaming cascade.

Whole Gale Blowing

The officers seek what shelter they can behind the dodgers, for the law of the sea says, "No keeping a look-out behind glass," meaning the heavy plate-glass windows of the warm, dry wheelhouse. They must be out in the open, where they can see every-thing ahead and astern, slow and aloft.

The wind and sea continue to increase, rapidly, and heavy squalls, accompanied by blinding rain, sweep over the ship. At 10 a.m. the captain takes a purser. "Half speed," barks the captain, shaking the salt water out of his eyes. She drops down to fifteen knots and rides easier, but at intervals plunges sickeningly, and as the propellers break surface, she shudders in every rivet. By noon the glass has fallen to 28 inches, and the log-book entry reads: "Whole gale with hurricane squalls. Mountainous sea. Ship pitching, lurching, and labouring heavily, and shipping large volumes of water fore and aft."

"Hove To"

The engines are now running at slow speed, which is just sufficient to give the ship steerage way. The seas have risen to forty feet from crest to trough and seem to be rushing at her like mighty foam-crested mountains. As in all heavy gales, there are isolated groups of three or four abnormally high waves at frequent intervals, probably piled up by the squalls.

These reach a height of over sixty feet, and advance with furiously curling crests, their steep, black fronts laced with a myriad streaks of foam. One of these breaks on board, on the fore part of the bridge, and, crashing on the boat deck, reduces three massive lifeboats to fragments in the twinkling of an eye.

The ship is slowly brought round till the sea is dead ahead, and the log-book entry reads, "Hove to."

Towards evening the glass steadies at 27.60 and the sea becomes confused. The captain predicts an imminent change. Sure enough at sunset, after a terrific rain squall, the wind lulls momentarily, then suddenly flies round to the north-west, and begins to blow with renewed violence. But the centre of the storm has been passed, and it is only a question of hours till it blows itself out.

Fifty Sleepless Hours

Throughout the night the glass rises steadily, and the hurricane squalls lose their intensity. As the sea gradually subsides, the engine revolutions are increased, and by the early hours of the morning the telegraph signal the welcome order "Full speed." The jaded captain, satisfied that all danger is past, takes off his clothes for the first time in fifty hours and climbs into his bunk to sleep like a log. Before the voyage is over the liner encounters another gale lasting forty-eight hours, and she is much delayed.

On arrival in New York, the ship-news reporters clamour round the captain's cabin door. "You're very late, captain," they say. "Have you any story for the boys?"

The captain passes his hand wearily over his tired eyes and smiles. "Oh, nothing out of the ordinary," he replies. "Just a spot of bad weather."

The reporters bid him a cheery farewell and rush away to make a fine story about it.

CLOTHING STOLEN

All Saints Church
 Caretaker Victim

On being found guilty of stealing several pieces of clothing from the servant's quarters of the All Saints Church, Mak Choi, a 31-year-old unemployed, was sentenced to two months' hard labour by Mr. E. W. Hamilton at the Kowloon Magistracy this morning.

When charged the defendant pleaded not guilty.
 Inspector Bortallion, of the Mong Kok Police Station, in outlining the case stated that the complainant, Loung Chun, the caretaker of the church, was asleep in his quarters when he was awakened by a noise of rustling paper. Upon looking round he saw the defendant trying to remove some clothes in paper. He immediately gave chase, but the defendant ran across the yard and climbed over the fence. Two men who were in a garden on the other side of the wall and seeing the defendant running away, arrested him at a brief chase.

To-day's Short Story.

GRIM

By Michael Kent

SOME people are citizens of towns neither by accident of birth nor chance of occupation, but by a compelling affinity. A man may travel the five continents to learn that London is home, or forget his native Grass and slake his nostalgia in Mandalay.

This is most true of Paris. These soul natives are not held by such allure as grips the heart of youth. They are attuned to quiet. The streets, the smells, the people, the seasons and the skies content them. They do not go away.

"Suits me all right," you will hear in explanation. "I feel at home here," but it goes deeper than that.

John Stanley was that kind of Parisian. He had the Parisian fancy for a seat in the stalls and no yearning for a place on the stage. To sit with his long-lashed back at the pavement edge and discuss the traffic of the streets, religion, art, morality, all in the kindly light of an ethic large and Omnesque, to foster neighbourliness careless of convention, to have an eye for the ironies, to be a little fastidious about food and drink, these were the canons of his life.

He had two small rooms on a first floor off the Boulevard Raspail in the house of a pear-shaped man who lived in his shirt sleeves. You might find him at the English Circle playing platford or burrowing among the bookstalls on the Quai, at Chantilly for golf or at Charenton gossiping on the river bank under the plane trees among the children with their nurses, always "in his plate," interested, impartial, expert in the finesses of the game whether he played or watched bare of snobbery and pretence, a true compere, a man whose zest of life itself had outlived all minor infatuations.

Wherever he went Grim went too, the tawny Belgian police dog with the wide grin, the drooping jaws, the careless masterly lunge and the "Isn't life a joke?" expression.

John lived maubles. Except for his morning coffee he fed at places chosen by long experience.

TO-MORROW'S STORY

To-morrow's story will be "The Treasure Seeker," by C. T. Stoneham.

On Monday he went at noon to an Alsatian tavern near the Bastille, whose patron came from Colmar and excelled at onion soup and pate de foie gras. That evening John would dine at Montmartre chez Le Gros Polisson and play a game of Belotte with an out of work actor who made a living posing as a professional apache in the cafes whither tourists resort to be thrilled. Le Gros Polisson is a place too bad to be notorious. The company is doubtful, but, when in season, the frogs are excellent.

A Calaisian house on the left bank expected him for Tuesday lunch. The cook there was a master of the poetry of mussels. He would dine frugally at home that night. On Wednesday he would be found at the Restaurant American near the Palais Royal, and that evening he kept as feast, eating duck chez Margery with George Blount from the Embassy. They would finish their Chamberlain over a game of chess. So he lived as by the law of the Medes. Sunday he was back at the American again.

Everywhere Grim attended, padding silently behind, swinging under his chin the little silver disc that read: "I am the friend of John Stanley. I live at 34, Rue Marcel Thill."

Then one day madame brought the morning coffee to find John Stanley, flopped in his armchair, fully dressed, white in the light and blue grey in the shadow, the same placid, half disdainful amusement at the vaunts and follies of life gleaming in his half closed eyes.

Grim was beside him comatose, glassy-eyed and gasping. He would have died, too, but for the vet, the policeman brought. "Save him at all costs," they said. "He is our only witness."

For it was murder. The dented head and forehead sprayed purple with the bruise of a shot-filled bag attested it. The gentlemen of the Surete were meticulous, indefatigable and baffled.

It was merely one of those lightning-like eruptions of money madness that lie behind nearly all French crime. It had been futile too. John had been wont to draw fifteen hundred francs a week for his running expenses, and there was but the lees of that. The thief had taken clothing and that might be traced.

Fifteen days ran most of the clues to death. The murderer was a friend or acquaintance, for he had either returned to the house with his victim or come by invitation. No one had let him in, and the place had not been forced. It was a professional job, for the dog had been drugged by a method favoured by the adept. So far all seemed easy, but the detectives, faced with the task of tracing possible contacts in a dozen different eating houses, quailed.

There was an exhaustive comb-out, half a hundred people endured for hours the slow, suave, tireless questioning of "the violon," but nothing came of it. Blount cleared up the business side of the estate, a simple matter since John had been a methodical man, took Grim home when the poor beast was strong enough, and tried to make him settle down in his apartment.

The police have had the former residence of Bruno Richard Hauptmann (right) under a strong guard, following the discovery that the wood used to patch the ladder, found at the window of the Charles A. Lindbergh residence on the night of the kidnapping, matches with a piece in the attic of the Hauptmann home that had been sawed away. The identification was made by Mr. Arthur Koehler, United States Forestry Service expert, who is shown with the ladder. Detectives are seen looking in the Hauptmann closet before they found the carefully concealed trap door leading into the attic, indicated by the arrow below.

ENTHUSIASTIC AUDIENCE

It has frequently been said that the Hong Kong public does not care for concerts, or, indeed, for any music except the lightest; but it was definitely proved, by the recital given by Madame Renee Florigny at the Helena May Institute last night, that Hong Kong can appreciate good music and will attend performances when such is offered them.

A crowded audience last night received Madame Florigny's varied programme with enthusiasm throughout and in response to their applause the gifted pianist played two encore pieces, the favourite Minuet of Paderewski and Brahms' Waltz.

The French Consul, Monsieur R. Solange Teissier and the Consul for Portugal were amongst those present.

Madame Florigny hopes, in response to numerous requests, to be able to arrange another concert here on her return from Manila, where she is booked to appear shortly.

He added that he would study the committee's report with every desire to encourage the development of this latest marvel of scientific achievement.

No doubt, he said, much preparatory work would have to be done before a public television service, however limited in scope, could be started. But if, as he hoped, the committee had been able to recommend a definite scheme for the introduction of a broadcast television service on lines which the Government could approve, they might look forward to the first steps being taken during this year towards the realisation of such a scheme.

NAVAL INSPECTION AT VALLEY

A total of 1,150 officers and men were landed. In marching order, wearing steel helmets and carrying oilskins.

His Excellency arrived at 10.15 a.m., and was greeted with the salute, the battalion coming to the "present."

After being inspected by the Commander-in-Chief, the Battalion and Battalion marched past in column and then in close column to the strains of the Royal Marine Massed Bands, drawn from the Cruisers.

The order was then given to "On oilskins," whereupon all seamen took off their marching order and put on their oilskins; the marching order was then put on over the oilskins.

The Royal Marines, who only carry a waterproof cape, put these on over their equipment.

The Battalion then marched past for the last time in column of route, carrying their rifles at the "secure." The guns of the battery were also covered, as if it were raining.

Thus the inspection had also a special practical value, the men of the China Fleet being exercised in the practical evolution of carrying their oilskins, and putting them on in a short space of time without putting their equipment on the ground.

AERIAL SALUTE The Royal Marine Massed Bands then marched past in the rear of the last platoon of the Battalion. The vast concourse of spectators were given a thrill when the last part of the programme took place, 15 aircraft from the aircraft carrier Hermes, swooping down in five flights to give the aerial salute and then roaring away towards the harbour.

The timing of the arrival of the planes was perfect, for no sooner had the last platoon marched past the saluting base, than a hum was heard and the planes, in flight formation, swooped down Happy Valley from the direction of Wong Nei-chong Gap, and saluted the Commander-in-Chief as they passed.

The dog fretted. Blount took him to Pere la Chaise, to the newly heaped mound, and the great dog seemed to understand. He leaped mournfully, head and tail down, pained and puzzled. The man was sure that Grim accused himself of neglect.

After a time Blount took him to the office in the Faubourg and one mid-morning Grim, who was recovering his strength but not his spirit, slipped out and was lost.

It troubled Blount, who had been very fond of John Stanley, and who now accepted Grim as a sacred trust. The obvious inquiries were made but, coming back late that evening, he learned of the dog's return from the concierge.

"He has come back? Good. He was at Rue Marcel Thill then?"

"No, sir. One had not seen him there nor at Pere la Chaise. I offered him food. He would not eat. A droll of a dog! He has the air of a monsieur who has done his day's work and returns in the evening for a little repose."

Grim, at full length on Blount's hearth-rug, looked as though he had travelled far. Still he refused to eat.

The next day and the next it was the same. The dog evaded the porters at the office at mid-morning, and returned to Blount's flat at night. He ate nothing.

The second Sunday of this strange mode of life Blount followed him. It was not difficult. Grim's progress had all the leisurely diversions of dog-kind. He was traffic-wise, crossing at the appointed places and waiting for the agent's signal, but he went a long way threading the boulevards till he turned down the Rue Richelieu and into a small restaurant near the Palais Royale.

Blount saw him enter and a moment later, followed.

Twelve o'clock was striking. The patronne, a busy, fresh-faced, whiskery Breton woman, was greeting the dog as a friend.

"Good morning, Monsieur Grim, ca va? One expects thee, is it not? Tien, the little marmite with chicken neck! It is here. All ready. To table then, monsieur!"

The good woman set a steaming bowl in a corner whereby the big dog took his seat gravely, thumping his tail on the floor for thanks. A spark of his old heartiness glowed in him as, waiting for the stew to cool, he regarded her.

"Pardon, sir," Madame turned to Blount, "An old friend, that one. Monsieur desires?"

"I think the gentleman has chosen well," said Blount diplomatically. "I go to imitate him. But first, perhaps, a little glass, two little glasses, if Madame will honour me!"

So, making a friend of Madame, he began to learn what he wanted to know.

"He is Grim, the friend of the English gentleman who was..."

Madame crossed herself.

"I remember Mr. Stanley. He was a friend of mine, too."

"Ah, a friend of Monsieur. I did not know his name, but he came here every Wednesday, every Sunday too, for many years. Ah, the poor gentleman, so amiable, of so good a heart! It was terrible."

Her sad due to John acquitted, she went on to Grim. It was a thing incredible. Only the Wednesday before last he had turned up on the stroke of twelve and sat beside the accustomed table of Monsieur. It tore the heart. On Sunday also: One would welcome him always for the sake of good monsieur. "N'est-ce pas, Grim, bon ami?"

Grim thumped his tail.

"And here is a strange thing too, sir. The boy Jules always kept a scrap of meat, raw in the service for him. He went there too last Wednesday, and passing the hook where Jules hangs his overcoat, he stopped, he sniffed, he howled. It tore the heart to hear. It was a coat that his master had given to Jules. The good dog knew by the smell."

The restaurant was filling. Madame had her life to gain. Monsieur would excuse her.

So the mystery was explained. Grim, every day, fed at his master's customary place, the Armagnac, the Tiverton d'Alsace, the Margery. It became the talk of Paris. Some said it showed the strength of habit, some that the soul of the man went before a kindly shadow, not to be so abruptly torn from his loved Paris. One heard of people who would not sit at his table on Stanley's accustomed day, but in general it was bon rechange. It brought more custom than it kept away and Grim had some trouble to avoid the impertinent trespasses that follow fame.

John Stanley had been killed on the thirteenth of July. September saw the close of the account.

It was this way.

Madame Roux was always early coming to the restaurant after market. Jules was always late. When one has a little commis learning how to set the tables he will not learn if one is there to do it for him, understood. Emile, the commis, had done the sweeping and the brasses, and had started on the tables when the patron entered. One still called him the patron, but they saw little of him at the restaurant—even then they saw too much.

He was a thin, sallow man with varnished black hair and a writhing slit of a mouth that looked as if he were amused at something which would not amuse you at all. He wore grey suede shoes, grey trousers, a brown jumper tucked inside his narrow white belt, and, over his eyes, a floppy cap designed like a star fish.

"Little one," said he, "go at at once to the Palais Metro. Wait till you see a gentleman in a top hat with a wooden leg. Bring him to me at once."

"I go, sir," said Emile, glad of an errand that took him away.

Monsieur Roux walked inside and pulled open the drawer of the cash register on the bar counter. The ting of the bell brought Madame from the kitchen.

"Good morning, adored one," said Monsieur, registering his equivocal smile as he tipped some cognac into a glass.

"Didi," Madame's jaw hardened. "It is you."

"Fifty, seventy, a hundred, a hundred and fifty," commented Monsieur, counting the notes. "It is I, chere. You must do better than this. I go to Auteuil this afternoon. Afterwards I dine at Armenonville and a hundred and fifty francs! It is a bagatelle."

"I have no more," said Madame obstinately. "And that is there to start the day, to give change. I have no more, Didi."

"So much the worse for you," said Monsieur. "I shall break the furniture and the crockery. Oh, seek not for Emile. I beg. I have sent him to look for someone with a wooden leg and a top hat. Consider the possibilities of such a combination, my cabbage. He will be a long time, assure yourself."

Madame had no delusions about this elegant husband of hers. She was childless fortunately. She worked hard and long to be bled by him periodically. But both the law and the church in France impeded a woman's petition for divorce. The family regime is so essentially patriarchal and Madame was too French to disregard it. Monsieur then, as he well knew, had to be placated. He was every sort of animal.

"Come back at two," she said. "I shall have taken more money then."

"At two," he said, refilling his glass. "On Sunday with the damned dog of the Englishman here." He turned on her, a strange bitterness intensity in his voice. "Is it true then? Does he come here always this animal?"

"Look then," said she, and pointed at the clock. "It waits eight minutes to eleven. On the stroke of eleven he will be here."

EGG-CONSUMPTION IN CANADA

Per capita consumption of eggs in Canada, it is claimed, is the highest in the world, approximately 350 a year. In 1933, the total consumption amounted to 3,600,000,000. "The Sword Defends The Land"

IL DUCE'S WARLIKE SPEECH AT INAUGURATION

Rome. "The plough works the land, the sword defends it," declared Signor Mussolini recently, when he inaugurated the new Italian province of Littorio.

The province, which lies just south of Rome, consists for the greater part of land reclaimed from the Pontine marshes.

There was still 10 years' work to be accomplished in the province, he said, and in order not to be interrupted Italy must be militarily strong.—Reuter.

TRIFLING WOUND CAUSES DEATH

Fatal Scratch From Pet Kitten

Five months ago, Mrs. Gertrude Mary Hill, aged 56, of Glenburn Road, St. George, Bristol, was playing with her pet kitten, when it scratched her leg.

She died in hospital from blood poisoning and at the inquest at Bristol it was revealed that her death was a result of the scratch.

Her husband told the Coroner that his wife would not have a doctor until two months ago.

"The kitten still lies on her bed and seems disinclined to leave it," he added.

A verdict of accidental death was recorded.

EMPIRE AIR MAILS

Referring to the new Empire Mail Services and the considerable increase there had been in the past year in air mails dispatched from this country to other parts of the Empire, Sir Kingsley Wood said that for a really Great Empire scheme two things were essential—much greater frequency in air mail services and a cheap flat Empire air postal rate.

Faster air communications were also desirable and this involved adequate provision for night flying.

In the Government's Empire scheme, he continued, they had decided to adopt the important principle, of which the British Post Office had lately been the pioneer in inland mails, of sending first-class correspondence by air without extra charge.

He hoped, with the co-operation of the Dominions concerned, that in 1937, for the sum of, say 1½d., an Imperial correspondent in this country would have his letter transported half-way round the globe within a week, instead of the month hitherto taken.

INCREASED TRAFFIC

In embarking upon such a project he added that he had been fortified by the belief that the reduction of the time taken in the exchange of correspondence and the introduction at the same time of a flat cheap postal rate would cause the traffic to grow to a remunerative level.

Above all, he concluded, the Government had been encouraged to take this historic step forward by the belief that Imperial unity and corporate prosperity were largely dependent upon the freest facilities for rapid intercourse between the nations and peoples of the Empire.—British Wireless Service.

Yesterday morning the Master of the s.s. Apsey reported that he was standing by the ill-fated vessel in a position roughly 180 miles due south of the Colony.

VETERAN SOLDIER PRODIGY

Sir Bindon Blood's Life Of Thrills

BAG OF 52 TIGERS NEVER SURPASSED

That remarkable veteran, Sir Bindon Blood, who was 92 last week, is still hale and active. Although he does not go down to the City every day as he did until a few months ago, he avails himself of every fine day to do so. His memory is as clear and his mind as lively as ever.

"The only thing that worries me at all at my age," he told me a day or two ago, "is my family. They will attempt to coddle me."

Sir Bindon, who entered the Royal Engineers in 1860, has fought in numberless campaigns, in one of which Mr. Winston Churchill, as a subaltern, served under him. His "bag" of 52 tigers stands as a record. Whenever possible, in London, he goes on foot, scorning taxis and buses. The only form of mechanical travel he likes is an Underground train.

MARCEL THIL RETAINS TITLE IN PARIS BOUT

THIL DELIGHTED

"I am delighted to give a chance to a fighter whom everyone considers to be my most dangerous opponent," said Marcel Thil, the I.B.U. middle-weight champion of the world before signing for 15 rounds at the Palais des Sports. The International Boxing Union selected the three officials for the bout. The referee was a neutral party, while an Englishman and a Frenchman acted as judges.

McAvoy's defeat was an unexpected one, following his recent challenges to Jack Petersen. Through one of his supporters, McAvoy was ready to gamble as much as £2,000 for a fight with Petersen, the British heavyweight champion. And money down with the Board!
